I have watched the development and strengthening of three skill sets that enable people to come to a deeply visionary and generous relationship with money. I call them Knowledge, Understanding, and Vigor. Just one won't do; we need all three.

Knowledge removes doubt,
the ancient Chinese sage Confucius said, because we enjoy the confidence of knowing what we are doing.
Virtue—or Understanding—eliminates care, because we are at peace in our own hearts. And courage—or Vigor—removes fear because we know we have the strength, persistence, and discipline to carry our journey through.

There are two layers of Knowledge about money, the one deep and the other practical. The first, and deep, layer of Knowledge is that money speaks of human character.

The second, and practical, layer of Knowledge lay in learning and developing the skills needed to handle money well—earning, bill-paying, budgeting, and saving.

The two layers of money Knowledge are woven tightly together. Only if we master money's practical side can we engage fully in its human lessons, and only if we perceive money's depths can we apply practical financial skills in ways that enrich our lives rather than detract from them. Without this deep level of Knowledge, our lives around money will be filled with conflicts and problems.

About Lynne and Tim

In 2011, we sold our charming house in Central California's wine country, gave away the furniture, and stuffed our art, clothes and small treasures into a 10 x 15 storage unit. We said goodbye to our surprised children and quizzical friends and now we live in rented apartments and houses internationally, putting down new roots one country at a time.

We have no property taxes, roof repairs or home insurance, so all of our spendable income is used to fund our new way of life. We do have small suitcases, an appetite for new experiences, good computers, and the savvy and flexibility to make ourselves at home in almost any situation.

We have lived in Mexico, Argentina, Turkey, France, Italy, England, and are currently in Bray, County Wicklow, Ireland. We visited Marrakech and sailed home for the holidays.

In February we sailed back to Europe and spent March in Portugal. April we wrote and storm-watched in remote, lovely Kenmare, Ireland. We spent three months in Paris, still writing, but eating and cooking like upscale gypsies! Then it was on to Berlin, where the German people made us feel as if we were family. We are now living in East Molesey, Sussex, UK, right along the river Thames. Please sign in for our email and we'll let you know every time we tell a new part of our story.

Our Problems With Food in Sri Lanka

04/12/2013 by alyson@worldtravelfamily 2 Comments

If you've been following our Facebook page over the last month, you'll have seen me alternately complaining and raving about food in Sri Lanka. Food is a big part of our travel experience, we like to try as many new foods as we can and, hopefully, enjoy them. (For non-regular readers, my husband is an [...])
